a drawing's comments, notes, and labels with a specific content block in the drawing. A work group is used to create and manage projects and drawings within an organization. It provides a virtual or physical location to store files of any type. Project and drawing files are stored within a work group in an application specific folder structure. Each application which uses the Autodesk Files feature will have its own set of folders and files. A work group can be located on a file server, an AutoCAD Server, an Autodesk Office Online (AOO) website, an Autodesk Exchange Site, or within a specific AutoCAD folder. Special types of work groups include the Local Network, which is shared by a group of computers running AutoCAD. This is usually used to share files and folders across a local area network, and the Internet, which is accessible from any PC on the Internet. The Internet can be also be used as a method of "loaning" files between the author and user. When the workgroup is on the Internet, it is a Borrowed Workgroup, meaning that it is not stored locally on a PC.

Releases of AutoCAD are numbered beginning with the first formal beta version (BETA # 1). The numbering scheme usually consists of major and minor release numbers, with minor release numbers increasing when the software requires major features.
