Originally released in 2018, ConflictCraft 2 is a sequel to the award-winning ConflictCraft, the best-selling strategy game on Steam. Hundreds of thousands of players around the world have already lost hours on this military sandbox game. It's your challenge to plunge even deeper into this sandbox war game and to dismantle each of your opponents' strongholds. Every time a nation with its own army falls into your hands, you can devote a huge amount of your precious resources to developing troops to take control of their bases. Arming specialized units with powerful weapons will be the keys to your success. However, it's not only about weapons. The choice is yours: you can either arm your forces with extremely powerful weapons (which can cause massive collateral damage), or with friendly-only-weapons that won't harm your own men. With the help of economic policies and the Global Game Market, you can decide which units are considered the most appropriate for your army. After each level, you are free to upgrade your troops, weapons, vehicles and even hardware with the help of resources found in the battlefield. You can also choose between two gameplay modes: Armies or Nations. In the Armies mode, your goal is to divide your forces and throw your opponents out of their own stronghold. In the Nations mode, you fight against each other. Your goal is to destroy the enemy's strongholds while protecting your own. To destroy the enemy's bases you must launch several sieges with heavy-yet-friendly weapons. The longer you can keep your enemy's bases out of action, the higher your chance of victory will be. You can even protect your own bases with your most powerful units.

This article is a stub and is in need of expansion. You can help Project wiki by expanding it. Viper Attack was a prominent squad in Millennium. Viper Attack was an elite ground strike force employed by Caesar during the Third Infernus War. They was deployed to the planet Muraar VI, where they were opposed by the Muraan heavy infantry. Due to manuvers aimed at defeating Caesar's attack force, Viper was able to make excellent use of highly agile multiple-armed machines, while their raiders and torpedoes took an active part in the battle. Contents History Caesar and Viper Attack's first appearance. Caesar's forces make a warlike march down the Muraan Empire's largest mountain river, the Lyurgos, and into Muraar VI, to attack the fortress city of Muraar itself. In defense against Caesar's invasion, the Muraan forces prepared to defend themselves with siege weapons like the long trebuchet. Muraan heavy infantry was meant to take out the critical elements of Caesar's armada like his speedboats, finally destroying Caesar's fleet. The Muraan air force was to be used for supply and logistics but Caesar's bombers were left behind. Upon landing, Muraan heavy infantry were faced with Caesar's destroyers, which were meant to break down the opposition's defenses. Viper attacked the Muraan fortress city from the mountain base where it was landed upon. Using their cunning tactics, the Viper units allowed the heavy infantry to charge first, and prior to them were able to knock out some of the key towers that were in the way. While the fortress city was not able to be entirely defeated, chaos broke loose upon the city and would have likely been that the Viper units did little damage, as they were charging directly into the heavy infantry and their firearm-firing "destructors". The heavy infantry showed little leadership, and were not able to organize themselves in combat, considering the destructive force of Viper's robo-units. The Viper torpedo squad alone managed to set up a blocking minefield in the river's. The Viper's speedboats easily swam through the minefield while ferrying units across, and sent heavy infantry units flanking the enemy. Viper's elite strike force was mostly left undefended while the heavy infantry were being wiped out in the first skirmish, as

Caesar was fatally wounded by a trebuchet with his own sword. The
