Prosody in psychiatric voice audiometry: a preliminary evaluation of the diagnostic orientation. The present study was designed to test the hypothesis that prosody is the critical variable for establishing a diagnosis of voice impairment in psychiatric patients. A group of 24 young adult male patients with nonpsychotic major depression (n = 17) and schizophrenia (n = 7) participated in this study. The control group included 25 young adult male volunteers. During a single session, all subjects were recorded on videotape, while reading "Alice in Wonderland" in a continuous, uninterrupted manner. Subsequently, a panel of 5 judges established the final diagnosis of voice impairment of each subject, based on both the voice reading and videotape viewing for each subject. In addition, each subject's speech behavior was rated on a 5-point scale and the subjects received a voice handicap index score on a 100-point scale. A statistically significant difference was found between the two diagnostic groups for the variables of number of intonation breaks, mean pitch, duration of pauses, average loudness, and pause-to-utterance proportion. There was no significant difference between the two diagnostic groups for total speech ratings, double phonations, and total masking. These findings support the hypothesis that prosody may be used as an important variable to support or rule out a diagnosis of voice impairment in psychiatric patients.

Video! I've been scanning through the Vista forum finally surfacing to some of my old posts and I'm finding some old gems. I'd like to share one with you. I'm using voice-to-text for the Vista Beta and I was able to create a macro which automatically inputs my opening line. I'll save you the time of forcing it and then adding my closing line. This is what you type from the Windows 7 Start menu and it will launch the New and Video option.

Looking for a job? CV Maker will help you stand out from the crowd. You've been dreaming about a career in a particular field, but all the resumes, cover letters, and interviews have left you wondering: "Why am I not getting interviews, and how can I improve my chances?" You have a plan - to begin with, you want a job, so you are ready to write a resume, look for job openings online, prepare for interviews, and get the job. But where to begin? How do you write a resume and cover letter? How do you even get noticed by the right people? If you are really that great, why don't you have the job already? You can't possibly write a CV - there are just too many details, and every word you put on a CV is like an invitation to reject your application. You need a CV creator. It should tell the reader: "This is who you should hire." However, writing a CV requires more than just writing up some bullet points. A resume is often only a snapshot, and a cover letter is just a brief summary. You need to write the best CV you can, and CV Maker does that for you. CV Maker is the solution. No more stress. No more dreaming about the perfect CV. No more writer's block. CV Maker has hundreds of sample CVs of different types, careers, and titles. You can choose the perfect one for your CV and then start writing.
